The manner in which the sentinel receives the countersign is as follows: He permits The sentinel commands, advance, friend, and give the countersign," The person advances, and leaning over the point of the bayonet of the sentry's gun, gives the pass-word (the guard must always receive it at a "charge bayonet,) and proceeds on his way. The guards are all numbered from 1, upward. If anything is wanted, or wrong, he sentinal calls for the "sergeant of the guard," mentioning his number, which is passed from guard to guard until it reaches No. 1, where the sergeant of the day is staioned, who immediately repairs to the post lesignated. During the night the orders are more strict than in daytime. won't come down to dats, you draw trigger on him, and of course kill him if you can,

The Trenton (N. J.) Gezette says: "Some years since, it will be remember-ed, that a great topic of discussion in mili-tary and civil circles, was the defenses in New York harbor. There was a prevalent opinion among the most distinguished engicers that in order to complete the protecion of the bay and city, and prevent a descent of hostile forces on the shores of New Jersey, it was absolutely necessary to gward the outer key of the Atlantic, by erecting a huge fort on the most favorable portion of Sandy Hook. Defenses thus located, it was believed, would command the ess to the Empire city, and strength on the upper forts for a renewed attack in case an enemy should pass beyond the reach

f their batteries. Acting on the suggestion, the Federal Government ordered the building of an immense fort on the western portion of the beach, which, from its strength and solidity, will no doubt be considered one of the most formidable harbor defenses of the United States. The corner stone of the fort was laid on the 26th of March, 1859. The walls will cover an oblong area of about one mile in length. It will have bastions, the length of each of which will be in accordance with the extent of its particular command of some point of the Atlantic. At present the northeastern bastion is nearly ready for mounting guns, and the eastern and northert curtains which protect it are sufficiently elevated to lay the embrastire stones. Two are nearly ready for the guns. The stones in front of the fort are from six to eight tons weight, and were brought from quarries in Quincy, Mass., and Maine. The tiers of the guns will have a rong and spacious casements. The foundation which is laid in concrete, was made seven feet from the surface, and the breadth of the walls at the base is fourteen feet and at the top ten feet. The assements are indented about thirty feet from the outer walls, and commanding all

France and New-York.

We read in the last French papers that Navoleon III. holds fast to the idea of organizing a regular sevice with the United States. In the year 1858 concessions were made for this purpose to a company at Havre, who, in order to carry this project successfully through, had entered into partnership with several capitalists and bankers. The war of Italy, and perhaps, also, the insufficiency of the capital realized, had compelled this company to postpone its operaon to a more auspicious time. ject has just been resumed upon an entirely new basis, the principle feature of which is that the French Government will make an advance of 18,000,000 of francs, without interest, to the Transatlantic Steamship Company, to be reimbursed in annual install-
